Some Poultry Facts Stops Japs To Mexico

(Special to the Garden Island)

If you think of buying stock get the best.

Rest satisfied with doing well and leave others to talk.

Cover the floors with fine sand and have a box in a corner of the hen house, where the sun can pour on it, well filled with dry road dust.

It pays to feed meat, fresh from the butchers, even at 20 cents a pound, in winter, if eggs are high. Use a pound of lean meat chopped fine, for 20 hens daily.

The excessive use of wood ashes in dust should be avoided. They destroy the oil of the skin and feathers and make them harsh and dull, as well as ruin the color of fowls' legs.

A good culler is always a man of experience. The inexperienced breeder often does not know the difference between a good and poor bird. He can easily learn by studying the standard, and if he is not willing to do this he should retire from the business.

It may be diarrhea or, what is more common, constipation, that makes the chickens droop. For diarrhea a little black pepper mixed in meal, scalded milk or a couple of pepper pills will generally prove effectual. For constipation a n abundance of green food will give relief.

The safest and surest method of preventing the entrance of rats into poultry houses is to place half inch wire netting under the floors. If the floor is of earth the netting can be placed below the level of the ground and the earth thrown on it, by which method it can be removed whenever fresh earth is desired.

Look well after the water. Keep it always before the fowls, pure and clean and renew it frequently. Do not let them drink water grown tepid in the sun. Why these things should be injurious we do not pretend to know, but a great many poultry men have found them so.

He who puts the finest product on the market reaps the richest harvest. Eggs are refined wheat, corn, grass and contain much that on the farm would go to waste. In winter a basket of 50 dozen will bring more money than a load of hay it took a large patch of land to grow, a team to cut, a horse and man to rake, two men to stack and a team, wagon and man to market. Sell fresh eggs or none at all. Get just as far as possible from the general lot dumped on the corner grocery. Seek for regular customers and get retail prices. Stop crying about low rates and cheap goods by rising above them. Herein is the secret of successful poultry keeping.

It requires a year's experience to know where the mistakes are made, and if one can learn how to avoid them, half of the difficulty will have been overcome. The greatest mistake is in undertaking the business with too many hens. The proper mode is to commence with a small flock, breed from these until the desired number has been secured. A breeder who had but little experience when he began procured several hundred hens with which to commence, but nearly two-thirds of them died with disease. He regards the disease as the most fortunate thing that happened, as he found out how to avoid mistakes that he had made, and the result is that he has since made his flocks pay him well.

Drugsacks are discouraging, but they are sometimes blessings in disguise.

That one egg is as good as another is a mistaken idea, and if you do not think so try for a while the work of selling strictly choice eggs to a customer—eggs from hens that have been well kept and fed on wholesome food—then put in a few eggs laid by a poorly fed or diseased hen and see if the customer does not complain.

Wire netting has almost completely taken the place of old time laths in building coops and fences around the chicken yard. The divisions in the houses are now also made with the wire netting. Fine mesh wire is now used between the walls, where there are dead air spaces, and beneath the floors to keep out rats. A proper use of wire netting will render a poultry fence absolutely rat proof. Wherever it is used it adds to the appearance and is fully as cheap as laths and much more durable.

A cellar is an excellent place for an incubator, because it is usually of an even temperature, especially if the cellar is one that will preserve roots and fruits; but the atmosphere should be pure, which will not always be the case in winter. Any place will answer for the incubator that is of an even and regular temperature.

If the incubator is in a room where the temperature changes no harm will result, provided the operator watches the lamp flame and does not allow too much heat to accumulate. The hot water incubator (no lamp) must be operated in a warm place, if possible, in order to avoid loss of heat at night.

It is important that the eggs for hatching receive consideration from the first. Every male that is not active and full of life should be sacrificed for one that is better. Be careful in feeding the hens, as eggs from very fat hens seldom hatch and if they produce chicks will be weak and puny. Much time can be saved in selecting only strong and healthy hens for producing eggs for hatching.

Difficult as is the lesson, it is nevertheless true that profit in raising broilers or first class roasters comes from broad, deep, full breasted birds, yellow in skin and legs. The scraggy little barnyard hen, with a mongrel male as the sire of her chicks, is incapable of producing a chick that will reach three pounds weight long before it is matured, at which period of existence it ceases to be a "broiler." It is the use of good breeds that gives success and profit.

The storekeeper who keeps eggs in his cellar from a week to a month needs to be looked after. Eggs should be shipped along as fast as possible.

The big commission handlers, handle all their eggs before putting them out. It is the only way to keep good with their customers. One bad egg in a four dozen case may mean the loss of their best customers. The producer should do the same if he wishes to establish and keep a name for producing good eggs. When this is done a producer can easily realize from 1 to 3, or even 5 cents per dozen more than the average producer.
